Orange, California, November 4, 2021 – (PR.com) – Just in time for the rainy season in Southern California, the damaged roof of the Orange County Rescue Mission’s House of Hope was replaced with a new one free of charge. However, the way it was done was reminiscent of an earlier era of cooperative action: a man asked others in his industry for help and they followed the call.

Charles Antis, Founder and CEO of Antis Roofing and Waterproofing, received a call from Anna Song, Chief Development Officer of House of Hope. “She said the roof was old, it was leaking, maybe we could replace it,” recalls Antis. “I felt uncomfortable because I knew that we were busy with our rooftop donations.”

The next morning he had an idea. Antis drove to the House of Hope and climbed onto the roof. He made a 30-second video with some of his roofers. He briefly described the need and then said, “If you can help, let me know.” The video was sent to all Antis colleagues in the local roofing industry.

“I’m very happy about it because it happened: through all of us who are ready to give a small gesture of kindness,” said Antis in a speech at the event.

Orange County Supervisor Don Wagner attended the event and presented certificates of appreciation to Jim Palmer, President of the OC Rescue Mission, and Charles Antis of Antis Roofing and Waterproofing.

House of Hope is one of many programs run by the Orange County Rescue Mission. House of Hope was founded in 1994 and provides about 65 formerly homeless and working women and children transitional housing, sobriety support and life skills coaching each year. Hundreds of struggling residents of the county have been helped through the efforts of this organization.
